Our Pattern.

By FRANK CARY.

A weaver sat one day at his loom,

Among the colors bright,

With the pattern for his copying

Hung near and plain in sight.

But the weaver's thoughts were wandering

Away on a distant track,

As he threw the shuttle in his hand

Warily forward and back.

And he turned his dim eyes to the ground,

And he thought of the world,

For his thoughts, alas! were not with his

Home,

Nor the wide beneath its roof;

When her voice recalled him suddenly

To himself as he softly said:

"What a waste of your work is spoiled,

And what will you do for bread?"

And then the weaver looked, and saw,

That his work must be undone;

For the threads were wrong and the colors

dimmed.

And the better threads had run.

"Alack, alack!" said the weaver,

"And this had all been right

If I had not looked at my work, but kept

The pattern in my sight!"

Ah! and it was for the weaver,

And will it be for us, we say,

At the end of our task of life?

"The colors that we have used here,

Were bright in our early years;

But we were the issue wrong, and stained

The work with doubt and fear—

Not faith and hope and love—

Because we looked at our work, and not

At our Pattern up above!"

and in the other ten to the load. The present practice must have one favorable consideration—the back-aching labor of storing the crop in the cellar and barn must certainly be less. But the difference in the crops would soon pay for the labor of procuring the sheds, and after that the extra profit would go into the farmer's pocket.

One, and perhaps the best, method of mixing muck with barn manure is to get it in season to have it dry, and then use it as bedding for cattle, and to cover the floor behind them, after cleaning the stable in the morning. In this way but very little ammonia is lost, as the muck absorbs it as fast as made.

Muck, unlike dung is improved by being exposed to the air, and is all the better for being frozen after being taken from the bog. It becomes fine and easy to work, and is used with less labor. The winter is therefore the best time to get it. It is also much easier approaching the bog then, than when they are not frozen on the surface.
